Jonathan has performed over 65,000 LASIK surgeries and it's no coincidence that he's become known as the LASIK go-to guy. What also makes him unique in the field is that over 300 eye doctors chose him to perform their procedures, some even making the trek from as far as California – and that's the kind of endorsement money can't buy.

After receiving a scholarship to Vanderbilt University, he then attended the prestigious Vanderbilt School of Medicine. After medical school, Jonathan completed his Ophthalmology residency at Emory University. At this time, LASIK was not yet being offered in the United States so Jonathan moved to Johannesburg, South Africa to hone his skills as an early adopter of the procedure.

When the FDA approved the surgery in 1995, Jonathan returned to the United States, opening his first clinic in Greenville, S.C., before moving back to Atlanta and founding Custom Laser Eye. Jonathan says his rigorous training helped broaden his perspective of a successful operation. "Here in the U.S. everyone tends to expect perfection," he says. "But instead of trying to go for a fixed end point and making sure every patient gets to 20/20 (vision), I focus on trying to figure out on an individual basis what will make each patient happy."

The doctor, whose vision is barely a hair off from 20/20, jokes that the only time he sees 20/20 is when he's in the operating room. But he's serious about his philosophy. "If you're a 40-year-old accountant or lawyer who doesn't play competitive sports and are interested in having reasonable distance vision, you may not need 20/20. If you're a baseball player or golfer, you might want better than 20/20 vision," he says. "It all depends on the individual."

Dr. Woolfson is also proud to be the Official LASIK provider to the Atlanta Falcons and Georgia Force, having recently completed procedures on 4 time All-Pro Keith Brooking #56 and Linebacker Michael Boley #59.
